Summary & Background

(First sentence includes Agency recommendation. Provide an executive summary of the action that gives an overview of the relevant details for the item.)

The tax rate, or millage, in each county is set annually by the governing authority of the taxing jurisdiction, and by the Board of Education. A tax rate of one mill represents a tax liability of one dollar per $1,000 of assessed value. We have received our digest from the County and it appears that there was a slight increase in our values. Given the criticality of driving a municipal revenue source, staff has recommended an increase of 1.0 in our mills totaling 4.0 mills.

Pursuant to State Law, we have held the required Public Hearings and received no public comment in favor of or against the increase.

For comparative purposes, a homeowner with the allocated homestead exemption, given increase of 1.0 mills, still would not pay any property taxes. A property not eligible for the homestead exemption, with a Fair Market of $60,000 (assessed value at 40% - $24,000 at 3.0 mills would pay $96.00)

For additional comparative purposes, a business with a Fair Market Value (FMV's) of 1,577,604.00 (assessed value at 40% - 631,041.00), at 3.0 mills would pay roughly $1893.00, at 4.0 mills would pay roughly $2524.00. This would be on the extreme high end as this is one of our largest FMV's.

Fiscal Impact

Fall gardens need sun, good soil, right plants

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Temperatures are dropping, leaves are falling, and home gardeners are beginning to plan their fall vegetables.

If you’re new to food gardening, University of Georgia Cooperative Extension offers tips that should lead to a successful fall harvest.

Establish the garden in a location that receives full sunlight, from six to eight hours per day.

Prepare the soil before planting based on soil test recommendations.

A laboratory soil test takes the guesswork out

University of Georgia Cooperative Extension experts say before planting seeds or transplants, first have your soil tested. After adding the recommended nutrients, then select plant varieties that are known to perform well in Georgia. (Special Photo) of determining whether the soil needs fertilizer or lime to nourish your fall garden crops.

To have your soil tested, visit the Extension website for directions on taking soil samples. Then bring your dry soil sample to your local Extension office with the $10 testing fee.

Plant fall vegetables on schedule and use varieties that are recommended for Georgia. For a list of recommended cultivars and planting dates, refer to UGA Extension Circular 963, “Vegetable Gardening in Georgia,” at extension.uga.edu/publications.

Control weeds, pest insects and diseases. When Mother Nature does not supply rainfall, water your garden thoroughly at soil level.

Successfully transplanting landscape plants takes pro

By PAUL PUGLIESE
UGA Extension

McDONOUGH — If you want to rearrange your landscaping, the best time to do so is quickly approaching, though it's not easy lifting.

Nurseries use tree spades to dig large trees from a field-grown nursery. Unfortunately, this is not the kind of equipment a home landscaper can rent for a weekend project.

The roots of trees and shrubs normally grow beyond the amount of soil a home gardener can move. To keep most of the roots within a small area, plants should be root-pruned in the spring or fall before transplanting. Root pruning is the process of severing the roots of an established plant that is going to be transplanted to encourage growth of new feeder roots along the root ball.

Plants moved in the fall (October or November) should be root-pruned in March. Those moved in spring (March) should be root-pruned in October. Root-prune after the leaves have fallen from deciduous plants in the fall or before buds break in the spring.

To root-prune, mark a circle the size of the desired ball around the tree or shrub. Next, dig a trench just outside the circle. Cleanly cut larger roots and backfill the trench with the available soil. Water the area to settle disturbed soil and provide adequate moisture.

Roots within the pruned area grow many new fibrous roots, and form a strong root system within a confined area. If not root-pruned, larger plants may die from transplant shock because of root loss.

Shrubs less than 3 feet tall and deciduous trees less than an inch in trunk diameter (measured 6 inches above the ground) may be moved bare root.

“Bare root” means most or all of the soil is removed from the roots.

Bare-root plants are easier to handle than those with a ball of soil around the roots. Bare-root plants should be planted while dormant. It is best to immediately replant. If not, keep the roots moist in peat moss or wrapped in plastic or wet papers until you are ready to plant.

To move trees with soil attached to the roots, trim the root ball to the proper size and shape with a spade. Keep the back side of the spade toward the plant, round off the trimmed ball at the top and taper it inward toward the base.

Avoid loosening the soil around the roots by cutting the large roots with hand or lopping shears and the small roots with a sharp spade. Next, undercut at an angle of about 45 degrees to loosen the root ball from the soil and sever remaining roots.

Prepare the new site before transplanting a tree or shrub. Have the soil tested and follow recommendations. Don't use fertilizer that contains nitrogen for the first year after transplanting.

Dig the new hole 50 percent wider than soil ball to loosen surrounding soil and ensure good root establishment. The root should be at the same depth it was before moved.

Research has shown that adding soil amendments to the planting hole will not provide benefits to newly planted trees or shrubs. Most studies show amendments can create drainage issues and cause poor establishment.

When moving the plant to its new home, lift the plant and shrubs by the root ball. Never carry a plant by the stem. This can damage underlying tissues. Place the plant in the hole and backfill with existing native soil.

Maintain constant moisture, not saturation, of the root ball. Add 3 inches of mulch to help conserve moisture, moderate temperatures and reduce evaporation. Keep mulch away from the trunk of the plant.

For more research-based advice on landscaping projects, read the University of Georgia Cooperative Extension publications at extension.uga.edu/publications.
